

Cricket

National World War II Museum

Crickets were used to make a slight clicking sound that mimicked noises of insects. Paratroopers and others carried these to communicate with one another in the dark or in places with limited visibility. One click was supposed to be returned by two clicks.